Reginald F. Lewis Museum Connection

Enslaved black people in the United Stated celebrated their freedom in many different ways following the Civil War. In Maryland, Union soldier Nathaniel Hopkins who was a former enslaved person, celebrated the end of slavery with a parade in his hometown, Trappe, Maryland. The Uncle Nace Parade is still celebrated today on the Eastern Shore.

Juneteenth is also a well known holiday in the black community celebrating the freedom of enslaved people. This holiday celebrated on June 19 is sometimes called Emancipation or Freedom Day in some states. Juneteenth is a combination of June and "nineteenth". It is celebrated with barbecue, singing songs, reading poems, and celebrating the positive contributions of black people to this country.
